

POEM OF THE WEEK

PEOPLE ARE REVOLTING

It's an interesting title.
How should we phrase it?
"People are revolting".
Is "Revolting" used as a verb?

A call for an explanation?
Could "Revolting" be used as an
Adjective; could that mislead
Or misconstrue?

People? Revolt (verb), Protest
(So confusing!)

Protest? The act of declaring their annoyance with
Or opposition to something.
Yes? Do you agree?

I protest!!! Why? I can,
it is my right to,
In a democracy.
I protest!!

What should I do?
What could I do?
Write a letter to the editor
of a well-known newspaper

Make the news (literally)
Arrange a scene that is featured in the daily news.
That could backfire and confuse

Align yourself with people (persons?)
Of a similar point of view and understanding
Of the issue? That's a hard one;
requires a methodical examination.

Examination be damned. Name a phenomenon;
Declare opposition to it. Like the truckers in Canada?
The protestors occupying the front lawn of Parliament?
they want an end to mandates, all mandates;

Laissez Faire all the way, to oblivion.

Protests, and mass protests, are interesting phenomena;
They have a catch-cry; a slogan; under which individuals
Or groups find an agreement, sufficient enough for them
To join. How many reasons are there to be part of a protest?

Is protest measured by how many people are protesting?
Are they inconveniencing others?
In a democracy, they have that right.
As long as it's peaceful, I hear you say.

Peaceful is, as Peaceful does.
